

Mo Bofu brings over a decade of experience leading enterprise transformation across industries—including financial services, telecommunications, retail, and fast-moving consumer goods. A seasoned advisor to C-suite executives, Mo has built a reputation for delivering measurable business value by integrating strategy execution, digital platform delivery, and operating model redesign.

Mo has led enterprise transformation initiatives in more than 26 countries. Her recent work includes a multi-million-Euro digital supply chain overhaul for a global consumer goods company, delivering a 23% reduction in delivery blocks and substantial operational cost savings. She also led pre-sales and delivery planning for a multi-million digital banking platform built on Azure cloud architecture, and unified global PMO governance and service operations for a multinational beauty and personal care company—unlocking over €200 million in long-term strategic value.

Mo's professional background spans both consulting and in-house transformation leadership, with tenure at Wipro, Deloitte, Accenture, and Vodafone Group. She has deep expertise in program delivery, Agile/SAFe coaching, technology modernization, and business case development. Clients and colleagues alike rely on her ability to orchestrate cross-functional, multi-geography teams and drive execution from strategy through implementation.

A Zimbabwean native, Mo moved to the United Kingdom in 2004. She holds an Executive MBA from The Open University and a BSc in Computer Science from the University of Sheffield. She is also a certified SAFe Program Consultant and AWS Cloud Practitioner. In addition to her client work, Mo serves as a mentor to professional circles that support underrepresented communities, with a focus on career advancement, sponsorship, and well-being.
